The Historical Foundations of Adapting Marxism to the Chinese Context and the Needs of Our Times (4)

Editors' Note: "At the fundamental level, we owe the success of our Party and socialism with Chinese characteristics to the fact that Marxism works, particularly when it is adapted to the Chinese context and the needs of our times," said General Secretary Xi Jinping in his report at the opening session of the 20th National Congress of the Communist Party of China (CPC). The CPC's century-long history has been one of constant promotion of adapting Marxism to the Chinese context and the needs of our times. During its historical journey of revolution, construction and reform, the CPC has steadfastly combined Marxism principles with China's concrete reality and excellent traditional culture in order to scientifically address the issues confronting China, the world, the people, and the times, endowing the Party's distinctive and innovative theories with Chinese characteristics, and striving to consolidate the historical and mass foundations of adapting Marxism to the Chinese context and the needs of our times, ensuring that Marxism are firmly rooted in China, guiding Chinese practice. In this issue, three scholars are invited to summarize the CPC's historical experience in the opening up of new horizons in adapting Marxism to the Chinese context and the needs of our times, in the hope of providing this process with historical enrichment in China's new era.
